NEW ZEALAND SCHOOL OF TOURISM

The background of the page is a photograph of several young women in flight attendant uniforms (dark blazers, white shirts, and blue scarves) in an airplane cabin simulator. They are standing behind a service cart, which is filled with various items like water bottles, juice boxes, and snacks. One woman in the foreground is smiling and looking towards the camera, while others are looking down at the cart or towards the camera. The setting appears to be a training environment.

The New Zealand School of Tourism (NZST) is New Zealand's largest private higher learning establishment, specialising in training programmes for the airline, travel and tourism industries.

The Dunedin campus caters to those seeking a career as tourism operators, flight attendants or tour guides, as well as in aviation, conferencing and events management. With an emphasis on practical experience, we prepare students to become 'work ready, world ready'. This international focus makes the NZST a natural choice for international students, who bring an important dimension to our learning culture.

We are focused on ensuring success for every student while learning, and in finding that 'dream job' in the industry – helping them gain practical experience and understanding of the industry through educational trips and paid internships.

Rated by the New Zealand Qualifications Authority as a Category One provider – the highest possible ranking – the New Zealand School of Tourism has grown to nine campuses around the country, catering to an ever-growing industry.
